NO FRIENDS

ROOTSTREET is the only game you play, with only one goal: DESTROY THE ANIMALS. Do this by instigating sneak attacks against them, using your feet to make them die, and aiming to score the most hits on them. Unbelievably, you can even eat them if you please! The extra points earned from this enable you to level up and progress through the game and unlock the rare cards. This is the game that teaches you nothing and shows you nothing, but purely entertains you!

There's no game down here; there's no story to tell; it's just you, a pile of cards and the chance to spread the fire as far and wide as possible! Look for these cards. Use them to summon a devastating Skull Bow to defeat the creatures of ROOTSTREET. After each round, gather the Blood you've earned to build stronger and stronger Skull Bows. When you reach a level where you can wield a mighty Keeper's hand, collect the hearts for even more points! And best of all: Do things... The most exciting possible things! Roll the dice! CURSE CHORES!

How far can you make it? We'll never know. Just know this: You can get out of this

A game that tells a story that is more personal than any other I can think of.8/10 PocketGamerAustraliaThe game sets an especially high standard for storytelling in video games.8/10 SiliconeraA good story makes a great game.9/10 GamesMasterThere's a surprising level of depth in its storytelling; the writing and dialogue is always interesting and the relationships are believable.9/10 Games CentralGoing beyond the standard 'find the 3 items' that are the core gameplay mechanic, there is a much deeper and meaningful narrative in The Spectrum Retreat.Q: Why did Shikamaru ask if he's evil? In Naruto Chapter 510, Shikamaru asked if he's evil. The boy could be between 10-12, but the reason he asked was to try and get Naruto to like him. In the end, Naruto did nothing. It might just be the kid is being stubborn or he's trying to test Naruto, but it seems more like the kid was trying to get Naruto to like him. In Episode 492, Gaara asks Naruto if he's evil as well. Again, this time he didn't know he was testing him, and still, Naruto didn't care enough to correct him. A: It's possible that he just wanted to see if Naruto recognized him as his old self. The older version of himself knows that Naruto was the one who killed his parents and possibly also caused his blindness. It is also possible that he wants to give Naruto the chance to remember him as the old him. Regardless of how you want to interpret it, he already got the results that he wanted in that he is certainly surprised that Naruto did not react to him. The boys also discussed what to do next so I'd say that the results are satisfying enough for Shikamaru. A: Shikamaru stated that if Naruto does not believe him, he will feel horrible. Because this is a complete fiction, there's no way that Naruto would question the character's credibility. He did not question his identity, he questioned whether he was good. Shikamaru is showing a little compassion and telling Naruto to figure himself out. This is likely to cause Naruto to become more paranoid and mistrustful towards others. This is the point that Shikamaru's plan is reaching its goal, he's setting Naruto up for failure. Naruto has good reason to distrust others. Naruto has already failed to trust others before, particularly with Ch

of Love Today we're talking with Martin from Guilty Pleasures about Game of Thrones, his weird Christmas traditions, and last summer's most anticipated event. To celebrate our holiday episode, the Traitor King is sharing this exclusive Christmas recipe with the world. Martin: "This is the feast of sacrificing Martin!" - Get your veal chopper ready because here comes the mincemeat! [Clears throat] [Clears throat] This is my secret recipe of love, the last gift I gave my wife, Yara. If I'm very lucky, she'll forgive me... When there's a full moon atop the Steel Throne, I can hear it calling her to play her Song of Love, she sings it to me when I'm lying in bed, because we've mastered the art of cunnilingus. Then she takes my hand and brings me to her bed... Joffrey's on the trail of his devious taint, so I made a cup of mummy liquor for my mother-in-law, Grandmother Olenna. I mixed it with cinnamon, clove, and a pinch of orange peel. I knew Joffrey couldn't drink anything else at court. At long last, I succeeded! Just me and my mum, cozied up to the fire. She has a new cane these days. A big one, with silver links. It makes her happy to see her cane, my mum says. I asked her for it, because I'm not sure she's seen enough pain lately. But she wouldn't give it up. "You've hurt me enough, my son," she said, "and I want you to walk again." Are you thinking what I'm thinking? Well... Ain't no one playin' the game o' Thrones but me! Oh yes, Joffrey is my man, an I have him right where I want him, him an' his big dick, all tied up and ready for me to...But I have a plan, my plan is called "The King's Wife" and it's like the Antidote to My Playa. Yeah, we'll be able to enjoy this pretty good...because my tits be rockin'

Q: Wine config and wineprefix directory for windows application What is it? Wine is a great Virtualization tool, it lets run Windows applications in Linux. Some questions: What is the best directory to create customizations of Wine? Because when i create new application in WINE, i need to create a wineprefix at some location, but where is best to create the wine prefix? Inside the home directory, or inside /home/myusername/.wine/drive_c/ ? Next question is, what is the difference between running winecfg and running /usr/bin/winecfg? A: What is it? Wine is a great Virtualization tool, it lets run Windows applications in Linux. Wine is not a virtualization tool; it does not run Windows applications in a different OS environment. There are a number of projects that attempt to convert Windows binaries into a more generic form that
