Gameplay Fantasy Grounds - Ultimate NPCs: Skullduggery (5E): Penny Anymore by Laura M. Swisher has been released and is ready for printing! We've been asked a few times what happens to Penny and even though we can't give the real answer, I thought I'd share it in this short update. I'll post more on Penny's story later, but I wanted to include this short update on the release of the PDF version of the book. This is the final version of the book and for the most part, we've made it ready to print. This version contains all the final proofreading and clean up by me and comes in at 1,123 pages. I've also included a copy of Penny Anymore on the cover of the book. This copy is just the first page of Penny Anymore and is just to show that the book is ready for printing. For those of you who already own the book, thank you so much for your support of the book. If you haven't been reading Penny Anymore and you haven't been following Laura's writing blog, you're missing out on

What's new:

(also called Octodad: Dadliest Catch for its OST) is an upcoming English-language Canadian-American science fiction comedy film directed by John Bennet and starring Cedric the Entertainer, Tiffany Haddish and Sam Richardson, based on the 2009 indie game, also known as Dadliest Catch, developed by Fireproof Games. It will be released by Lionsgate on August 3, 2018. The title is a reference to a statement made by a handicapped man in the episode "Knock Up a Downer" from the television series South Park (Cartman had a crush on Obama's wife Michelle). The campaign for World Down Syndrome Day also considers "distinction" or "different" the unofficial motto for "a long time". The pairing of these concepts, given how they represent disability, is used to emphasize disability pride and to contest its stigmatization. Some commentators have considered the game's title a stepping stone for further disability advocacy. Characters Production Dadliest Catch is a video game created by independent studio Fireproof Games and released on Nintendo WiiWare on September 4, 2009. It follows an unnamed father leading an octopus around in their house, taking care of its various needs. As they do so, the players are required to capture fish, which is later on eaten by the octopus. The game's premise has inspired a wide variety of websites and blogs devoted to and including a page on GameSpot, where the game's reviewer declared the gameplay addictive, weird, and ridiculous. Previously, Fireproof Games CEO Sean Ryan and lead game developer Jason Forbes had been working on a Portal-inspired game entitled The String, inspired by several dialogues by John Norman Belam, but which declined to be released due to a lack of funding.[2] Shortly after the release of Dadliest Catch, the game's creative director Sean Ryan started maintaining Dadliest Catch Online as a fan website with his friends, including composition Michael Daily. This simple website evolved into one of the most popular fan sites and unofficial news sites for the game. Ryan and his team began to collect social network information, resource files and artwork regarding the game, but failed to find a publisher for it due to poor sales and the economic recession.[3] After the game's release, the lead developer Jason Forbes had reached out to a recruiter employed by Fireproof Games about founding his own studio.[4] Forbes claimed that he had had a conversation with Sean Ryan, in which the two revealed that the game

Of all the races out there, the Reapers have one of the most despised ranks. They've been on our good side for a long time now, but they still revile us. Part of that is because they have to make a living by mining Reaver's Venom. While mining, they're forced to leave their home in the Biome and make use of the Reavers' toxic factory. Their inability to contain their greed forces them to destroy their homeworld, reducing their number by a fair amount. The Reapers that come up with this “plan” leave their planet before the first true Reaver is born, killing off all Reavers in the process (note that this means their idea will never be implemented). The Reapers that head to our solar system are sent by their masters to abduct all girls that look the wrong way. As stated above, these girls end up dead after doing so, and the Reapers won’t tell their masters where they are. None of them ever gets to have sex with a girl, which the Reapers see as a waste. Reapers hunt for girls (most often on the verge of dying) until they find one. When they do, they are taken to a Reaver’s compound, where they are left to die. While in their training, the Reapers are not given the option to tell their masters where they are, and if they do their masters will find out. If they tell their masters, they will be killed. What the Reapers get instead of a girl are all the fun things that come with training a Reaver. They get to eat, sleep and rest (as much as they can). The downside is that they can’t enter the mining factories unless their masters say so. While there is no way for the girls to escape, the Reapers gain access to the factories where they break the girls. They can be treated as though they were a novice, or as a trained one. You get to decide what you want them to do, and they can be put to work to whatever degree you’d like. The Reapers can work mines, factories, any job you give them, and are extremely good at that. The Reapers will have sex with you if you allow them to. Players should always be aware that these are Reapers, and that they are not women. They are also not children. They can be aged and underage as normal, but their appearance and voices
