Kainic acid application to the nucleus reticularis pontis caudalis (N.R.P.C.) or to the medulla oblongata caused within 5 min the inhibition of the motor activity of the muscles contralateral to the stimulating site of the brain. Subsequent blockade of the anterior portions of the somatosensory thalamus (A.S.I.) restored this activity within minutes. At the same time the activity of the muscles ipsilateral to the stimulating site of the brain was initiated. This evidence was obtained in an anesthetized preparation. It was given also in an immobilized preparation. It was stated that the effect of an excitatory signal from the brain, after its processing in the brain is realized through the modification of the information sent by efferent and afferent fibers of the muscles. The neurogenic inhibition of the activity of the effector zone of muscles is realized by stimulation of the medullary nuclei R.P.C., S.I. and A.S.I. In this way, the activity of the muscles is activated.
