Space Haven is one of the most moving games we've come across in recent times. It's a sincere tribute to a genre that for far too long has been absent from most indie devs' repertoires. Action Tower Defense: Geometry Defense is an area-enemies-appear-and-destroy TD with graphics, and gameplay mechanics designed with PC gamers in mind. The goal is to make fun and addictive games that are easy to learn, yet require a lot of skill for those that care to master their towers. GD is primarily inspired by WC3-style TD games but with a focus on mobility, unique enemy types, upgrade options, and big-screen performance. "For too long, TD games have stagnated in terms of gameplay and strategy. And now, with the emergence of a new breed of games that focus more on the AAA experience, there is a need for games that still push the TD genre and keep it interesting for those of us who like to play TD. I, and many others, are starting to realize that it is easy to make good TD games, but it is much harder to make ones that are worth playing. That is what I am attempting to do with Geometry Defense." Geometry Defense: Infinite will be available on Steam on release day with a free-to-play version available on mobile. On release day, we will also have a limited-time sale on the current PC version for $6.99, with a percentage of that money going towards the game's continued development. I will be able to fill you in on the exact percentage during the sale. Here is an image of the game: After spending a few years programming, I finally released the first iteration of my game Unity 2D / UE4 game, Beast: The Game. I'm working on a mobile, isometric, tile-based RPG. Beasts is similar in many ways to Kirby's Epic Yarn but with more items. I think it's a really fun game to play and I'm looking forward to getting some higher quality content up once I finish the mobile port. I love digging on games that are not of the AAA persuasion. I love finding games where the developers poured their heart and soul into a game and where the gameplay and graphics can be a compelling experience. I think that they are the most fun to play. I have a "todo" list of features, and about a dozen games on my radar right now for review/playtest. Some of my other works: Fistman - An RPG I wrote in Unity for iOS/Android: c9d1549cdd

Gameplay Gem Rush is a board game released in 2011 by UK-based independent game company Stately Play. The game is based on the text-only, traditional gaming card, featuring 9 customizable roles: control, rock, unlock, use, create, extend, level, gem and gate. The game also has 9 game phases: set up, create, use, create, activate, activate, switch, switch and victory. Players are intended to use all 9 game phases. The game uses a deck of randomly drawn cards to develop the game. Every player (except for the "Master") starts with 12 cards. During the game, each player adds to the deck by drawing from a shared deck of cards and then discarding the drawn card back into the shared deck. Players can also discard cards from their own deck to create an opponent's draw. Gameplay Gem Rush is a worker placement game that involves player-led creation and use of innovative artificial intelligence robots that players direct to perform tasks and transport resources around a galactic map. The games rules are simple, and intuitive. Each player has their own personal computer player AI that interacts with the game world via the computer screen, to provide and interpret player input commands, such as "move" and "create". These AI commands are known as the AIDictates. AI responsibilities are assigned to the AIDictate of each player on game turn. AI are not provided with instructions to develop a plan, but they do have the ability to think about the consequences of their decisions. The games cards are designed as a resource, and help the AI to perform its duties. A copy of the cards must be present in the AI's brain, or the cards will be ignored. The use of cards is also governed by the AIDictates. Cards are more than just resources, they carry game rules, like "destroy", or "transfer", "add", "meld", etc. A good game of Gem Rush requires high card intelligence. Each AI is defined by a unique player name, gender, and inventory. The AI is then assigned a character role: control, unlock, push, transfer, destroy, create, create gate, level and gem. These character roles are played on a grid with a low "density" of creatures, gems and debris. GameplayA Gem Rush is a board game designed to test the mettle of the players, or "gem crafters" in this first person view game. The objective is
