In this period of conflict, rising tensions between the Islamic Republic of Iran and the United States, the character Tony Mendez (Ben Affleck) is a highly experienced CIA field officer. He is transferred to the agency's Operations Directorate, to a new unit with a single directive to covertly retrieve the diplomats. Tony's new team is assigned the operation codenamed Argo, with his fellow operatives Nina, Roger and their families posing as a Canadian couple and a French film crew. The time of their departure has been deliberately moved up a week, close enough to the revolution to be of concern to the CIA, but before the embassy move. This requires them to enter Iran without diplomatic cover. To this end they travel with forged passports and false identities. While they have a fake British passport and fake French passport, they do not have a residence permit for Canada. Tony has two sets of real passports, one of which he holds in a file. He devises a plan to retrieve the fake passports and residence permit from the Canadian Embassy using the Chinese contact of his brother-in-law. Having been trained by the CIA in covert operations, Tony is aware of the difficulties of such operations. In the high risk period between the time when the plan is put together and the plan is executed, Tony contacts Ira, the American ambassador to Iran and his wife, and arranges for them to leave the country in advance of the protests. Tony, Nina, and Roger travel to Tehran
