But I really don't want to use the DB-API module. Also I have no idea why the fetchall returns a list with tuples. This is how I connect to my database db = MySQLdb.connect(host = 'localhost', user = 'root', passwd = '', db = 'test') Then cursor = db.cursor() And then cursor.execute("SELECT * FROM tabelle") returns a list with tuple in each row: (('1',),('2',),('3',),('4',)) So I don't know how to fetch the data from my mysql db. A: I think cursor.fetchall() returns a list. You can use this to iterate through the list to access the tuples as separate variables. Fetching all the rows from the database, i.e. querying the database for all the rows in the table is achieved using the cursor.fetchall() method, which will return a list of tuples, where each tuple contains the result from each executed query. It is good practice to use cursor.fetchall() when you don't need rows that are returned for every query, because the overhead of setting up a connection and iterating through all the data in a table is incredibly slow for large tables with large columns. A larger version of the code would be: cursor = db.cursor() sql = "SELECT id, data_type, value 6d1f23a050
