Two point mutations (Y305C and A375P) in the human glucocorticoid receptor (GR) gene were found in a patient with a rare form of isolated glucocorticoid resistance. Thus the patient is a carrier of an abnormal glucocorticoid receptor allele, and this allele is partially and constitutively active on a glucocorticoid response element reporter. We report the construction of a stable cell line in which the GR Y305C and A375P mutant receptor proteins can be induced with dexamethasone and examined in an exogenous glucocorticoid response element reporter system. The mutations were stably integrated into HeLa cells and stably expressed in a manner indistinguishable from wild-type GR. Co-transfection of the constructs with GRE luciferase reporters demonstrated an increased activity of GR Y305C and A375P over wild-type GR. The GR A375P mutant was even more active than wild-type. The GR Y305C protein was found to bind DNA with similar affinity to wild-type GR, but the GR A375P mutant had about 30% of the DNA-binding ability of wild-type GR. Therefore, these two GR mutations are important determinants of GR stability and function on exogenous glucocorticoid response elements.
