the wasatch sofftrip rip provides the ability to render the entire image in a single pass. if the image is small, it is possible to render the entire image in one pass. if the image is large, the rip will render the image in multiple passes. this will help the rip finish faster and reduce cpu utilization. the process to do this is as follows: we recommend starting with single pass rendering and rendering the image in one pass, if possible. this allows for the most cpu speed. once the image is rendered, it will be rendered in multiple passes. the two passes are a black & white pass and a color pass. if the image has a large dynamic range, then it may take several passes to converge on a decent level of quality. the wasatch sofftrip rip is capable of rendering a large range of images with a single pass. if your database is in the mol format, you will need to convert it to.csv or.dwg. this can be accomplished with a simple batch conversion utility. if you use a conversion utility other than wasatch sofftrip, make sure to check for the following in your conversion utility documentation: we are constantly evolving our wasatch sofftrip software and this is a part of that. wasatch sofftrip is a global software company and we are very much aware of the needs of our users around the world. we have been listening to your feedback and addressing many of your requests. with the latest version of wasatch sofftrip, we have made the following improvements: you can also upgrade your existing wasatch sofftrip installation from the about this program window in the application. to do this, choose the version of wasatch sofftrip you want to use and follow the instructions in the help file.
